Windows 10 users can improve multitasking by tweaking the default Start page, and adding to it any link they like. This is possible with the new Edge Browser window-snapping feature. Here's how to find your link, and how to "bookmark" it on your Start page. Bookmark link You can add any link you like to your Start page by typing its address into the Search box. Once you find the right page, tap or click it to open it up in Edge. If you haven't already, you can install the app (which is not free) for quick access to all your favorite links. Edge makes it easy to pin a link to the Start page. To do that, in the upper-right corner of the page tap or click the menu icon. You'll notice the app added a link to the page automatically, just as if you had pinned it. Now you can choose which link you want on the Start page, and you can rearrange or delete your pinned links. Microsoft has released a redesigned version of its Internet Explorer 10 for Windows 7 and Windows 8, 10 Beta. The new version supports universal themes and also lets you get the latest versions of Microsoft Office, Skype, and Windows Media Player from the web when you're not at home. The new IE also simplifies the download process with the new Download Status Bar, which shows how much of an article or download is complete before it begins. It's also possible to add Bookmarks from the top of the page, and check the Status Bar to see how far through a download you are. You can also manage cookies and track your downloads in a new History tab, either as a list or page by page. Tabs can be dragged, and the new font is easier on the eyes. You can now use a camera to take a screenshot of a page and then share the image. Also, if you right-click a tab and choose "New tab from the drop-down menu," you'll get a new "history tab" that contains the previous pages you've visited in the page's "collection." The Web Developer tool has been revamped, too. There's now a new pane on the left for designing new HTML tags and CSS styles.
